(Adapted from "VOANews" "Republicans Try to Keep Pace With Trump on Super Tuesday", March 01, 2016):

Texte

The key will not be how many states Trump wins, but how well Cruz and fellow Senator Marco Rubio perform since the delegates needed to eventually secure the Republican nomination are awarded proportionally in Tuesday's nominating contests.

In the Democratic race, a CNN/ORC poll released Monday showed former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton widening her national lead over Vermont Senator Bernie Sanders at to 8 percent. Clinton also has a huge lead in the Democratic delegates awarded so far.

Both the Republicans and Democrats will officially name their nominees at conventions in July, but a candidate can get an early start on campaigning for the general election in November by quickly getting enough delegates to clinch the nomination.

Rubio is looking forward to March as a big day for his campaign. That is when his home state of Florida holds its primary and awards its entire large batch of delegates to the winner.

Cruz is warning that the "Trump train" could be "unstoppable" if he wins big victories Tuesday. Cruz repeatedly tells voters he is the only candidate to have defeated Trump so far, in the first caucus in Iowa, although Trump has subsequently won contests in three other states.

Republicans campaigned Monday in the South, which accounts for two-thirds of the delegates that will be awarded Tuesday. Trump held events in Virginia and Georgia, while Rubio campaigned in Arkansas. Cruz focused his efforts on his home state and the delegates at stake there.

Clinton, looking to a possible general election against Trump, has also started to aim attacks at him and the remaining Republican contenders, all but ignoring Sanders, her immediate opponent.

"What we can't let happen is the scapegoating, the blaming, the finger pointing that is going on the Republican side," Clinton told voters Monday in Massachusetts. "It really undermines our fabric as a nation. So, I want to do everything I can (sous-entendu "do") in this campaign to set us on a different course."
